At 01:23, Seven Commits Deep, the Social Links Become Editable and the Bed Remains Presumed

A night of GNET restored to 7/24, three ways to hand someone an account, and a status log that keeps rewriting itself until the facts settle into their final wording.

The day began before most days do. At 00:25 GNET's card payment was declared available 7/24 again, phones included this time, and the changelog was updated in the same minute, as if the two could not bear to be apart. It is a familiar arrangement by now: the work, and then the diary of the work, written almost before the ink dries.

At 00:30 the guest orders admin for Oyun Qurdu was built like GNET, and six minutes later an `import_gnet` command arrived to copy its prices. One project quietly doing another project's homework, at an hour when nobody is checking. By 00:41 long category titles had been put on a diet, taglines capped at two lines regardless of how much they wished to say. At 01:15 accounts acquired three ways of being handed over: personal, new private, and shared. A small taxonomy of trust, finished after midnight.

Then, at 01:23, the seventh commit: social links, editable once, in site settings. The mood note attached to it reads like a stage direction rather than a promise. Then, presumably, bed. The word presumably carries the whole evening.

Behind the front of the shop, the archive did what it has been doing lately. Ninety-two changes in a day, sixteen of them deletions, most of them the same events renamed and renamed again. The groom on yesterday's wedding invitation was gotten wrong, then renamed halfway through the wedding, then quietly corrected; he is Emin, and has been since 19:26. The wolf was appointed head of legal, then given the copyright outright. TikSocket's mouse was nervous, then clumsy, then merely fumbling. The facts did not change. Only the sentences around them kept trying on new coats.

Somewhere between all this, episode 77 of Kurtlar Vadisi Pusu was logged as watched. Last issue it was 76, still arriving on a Tuesday. The episodes advance one at a time, steadily, the way commits do, the way nights do.

The lights, presumably, are off now. The changelog, almost certainly, is up to date.
